

WAR CRIMINAL

too afraid to come to the aid of Ukraine because of fear of a nuclear war.

Nuclear weapons were supposed to be a deterrent to war, and now they are deterring the world from aiding Ukraine.

There is a time when we must act to do what is right, not what is easy. Courage.

• Putin sure seems like either a madman or an idiot. Maybe both. He is trying to destroy a country with air power to act.

This must stop!!

...thinks we won't act or that we are weaker than Russia, and there will be no stopping an evil dictator who thinks he can act with impunity. ... must do what is right, regardless of what difficult it may be.

...thousands of his personal there to guard it. Exactly what rational purpose can there be for this? None, he can't win for losing.

• If we continue to normalize the buying of Russian oil, we are, in fact, financially "fueling" Putin's war machine.

This sounds all too similar to the lessons learned from World War II. Our country risks forever being stained as accomplices in this horrific attack on mankind.

No rationalization can place more value on energy over precious human lives.

The United States must immediately detach ourselves from this association and reconcile our previous mistakes. History will not judge us kindly.

Why NY

MY son had to wait to get a seat at school. As frustrating as that was, I'm really feel lucky. But 50,000 families on New York's charter wait lists who are not in Albany need that seat — and charter schools need to block charter cap like mine.

My children Hunter and Hayden started at a Catholic school. Hunter, my daughter, went to a district school and searched charter schools for a good option for my children and always knew they would be in one, but I was determined with my son.

I applied for Hayden to get into Success Academy through its lottery every year for five years. He never gave up — from the day he started kindergarten to the day he got the call that he was accepted. It was a relief.
