

Letters@nypost.com

Lying His Way to the Top: Santos' Fabricated Past

THE ISSUE: Revelations that GOP Rep.-elect George Santos lied about his history and education.

• The George Santos fiasco demonstrates a lack of regard for integrity and a lack of oversight in the institutions that govern our country ("Doghouse," Dec. 28).

If an individual flagrantly lies in the process of applying for a job, then the application should be nullified.

But instead of deeming this act reprehensible, we tolerate and condone bad behavior. This is not different from the California college-admissions cheating scandal.

It is disappointing to see that the message we are conveying to our next generation is that "the ends justify the means" and the "means" doesn't really matter.

Ronald G. Frank
West Orange, NJ

• So let's get this straight: Newly elected GOP representative George Santos is going to be sworn in, regardless of the fact that he lied about almost everything in his campaign. Wake up, America! This is why this country is going in the wrong direction. He should resign his seat.

• What's all the hullabaloo about Long Island Rep.-elect George Santos not being allowed to be seated in Congress? So what if he lied about where he attended college and later admitted he never graduated? Or that he lied about working for Wall Street firms, his Jewish heritage and his service in the military? He didn't even border and-out lying that George Santos did in regard to his educational, religious and vocational background.

George Santos

My question was: If you hired an individual who made claims on his or her résumé, and you found them to be false, would you keep them? The answer was an overwhelming "No."

Why would his constituents want a liar to represent them in Congress? I know I would not, and I would feel "slimy" by this impostor. Santos is a disgrace and the seat should be special elected to a Republican Democrat wins not go un thinks it is all normal and OK because he says so. He might be living in an alternate universe. Isn't anyone worried that this guy is slightly off-balance?

B. Lorge
Dix Hills

@nypost